Feeling the Pinch After Holiday Spending?

The holiday season may have come and gone, but if you're starting to feel the strain the came with the holidays, you're not alone. The joy of gift-giving, travel, and festive meals often leaves us with a financial hangover that can take months to recover from.

Create a Budget

If you went over your holiday budget, you can bounce back by setting a realistic budget for 2025. Look at what you spent over the holidays and how much (if any) was purchased on credit. Prioritize your needs, any outstanding debts you have, and set aside some for your savings account. You'll be surprised how quickly you can get back into your normal spending habits and patterns.

Cut Back (But Don't Cut Out) Unnecessary Expenses

January is the perfect time to look at your spending habits and see where you can make cuts—without being too hard on yourself. Cutting out everything that brings you joy can lead to burnout. Instead, aim to reduce unnecessary expenses.

For example, if you made morning coffee stops 5 days a week, try reducing those to once or twice a week. If you order takeout three nights a week, cut that back to once a week. Small dollar purchases can add up over time.

Sell Unused Items for Quick Cash

The holidays likely left you with new clothes, new gadgets, new appliances – you name it. Avoid the potential clutter and consider cleaning out your closets, cupboards, and cabinets. Consider selling some unused items. Platforms like eBay, Facebook Marketplace, or Poshmark make it easy to list items, from clothing to electronics, and turn them into cash.

Recovering from post-holiday spending doesn't have to be stressful or overwhelming. By taking a practical approach, sticking to a budget, and focusing on paying off high-interest debt first, you'll be on your way to financial recovery in no time. Remember, it's not about perfection—it's about making steady progress and finding balance between paying off debt and still enjoying life along the way.
